ADELAIDE SA 5000

I desire the attendance of all honourable members of the House of Assembly and Legislative Council, on the date Monday 10 July 2017 at 10:15am, at the building known as Parliament House, North Terrace, Adelaide, for the 22nd session of the South Australian Youth Parliament.

Her Excellency, Appurva Raaj

Youth Governor of South Australia

Youth Governor's Motion of Public Importance

Her Excellency, the Youth Governor Appurva Raaj directs and invites the Government of the Youth Parliament of South Australia to move a motion that:

"South Australia reform the juvenile justice system by abolishing the incarceration of indigenous youth in South Australia and instead investing in community based, rehabilitative programs for indigenous juvenile delinquents."

Below is a list of arguments in favour of the motion and arguments against the motion. This list is not exhaustive but may be used as starting points for this debate.

For:

- A system can't be fair or just if the marginalised and vulnerable are the first to be affected by it. Indigenous youth are disproportionately represented in the juvenile justice system.
- There are entrenched systemic issues with the current juvenile justice system; more than half of detained indigenous youth are unsentenced, endure longer periods of incarceration, and enter the youth justice system younger than their non-indigenous counterparts.
- Rehabilitative schemes are widely researched and have yielded drastic positive results in many jurisdictions around the world including Belgium, the US and New Zealand.
- A community based rehabilitative model will give more opportunity than the current system does for indigenous communities and community elders to be active and voice their opinions in the way in which young indigenous youth can be deterred from delinquency.
- Focusing on growth and development is a better deterrent for crime than any punitive measure ever will be. Indigenous youth incarceration in South Australia is subjecting the current generation of indigenous youth to discrimination and ill-treatment.

Against:

- Solving juvenile delinquency is related to a whole range of other issues such as poverty, alcohol abuse, violence and dysfunctional relationships and family environments.
- The criminal justice system must be blind to race. It must treat people appropriately and equally, according to the rule of law.
- We cannot abandon all punitive measures as there will no longer be a deterrent for committing crime.
- Youth who have committed serious crimes deserve some level of punishment in the form of incarceration.
- A lack of good relations between the police force and indigenous communities is a contributor to high levels of crime and incarceration
- South Australia already has a family conference model serving as a community based semi-rehabilitative model which includes meetings and sessions with young offenders.
- This ignore the greater problem across the whole justice system of people of all races and backgrounds being incarcerated for minor offences due to mandatory sentencing laws.
- This is government paternalization of aboriginal communities; the solution lies in greater consultation with indigenous communities and greater representation of indigenous voices and contribution in these discussions.

National Motion of Public Importance

"The government should take more action, through its statutory authorities such as the CSIRO, to prevent climate change on both a domestic and international level."

Below is a list of arguments in favour of the motion and arguments against the motion. This list is not exhaustive but may be used as starting points for this debate.

For:

Without urgent action, dire impacts on the Australian environment will follow including a greater frequency of natural disasters, species loss, and environmental and habitat destruction.

Australian industries including winemaking, agriculture, fisheries, tourism, etc. are threatened by the impacts of climate change in turn risking jobs and Australia's economic wellbeing.

The impacts of climate change will further deepen the divide between first-world and developing countries.

We owe a duty to future generations to leave a liveable planet.

Failure to address climate change will only intensify the international refugee crisis as populations will flee from small island nations who will face the most immediate and harshest impacts of climate change.

Climate change poses significant risks to Australia's food security meaning we will be more dependent on other countries and subject to international prices and supply in order to feed our population.

Against:

We are likely already past the tipping point of irreversible climate change. We must accept our fate.

Australia is a small nation and the sacrifices we make are meaningless when larger countries like America are abandoning their climate change commitments including withdrawing from the 2015 Paris agreement.

The science on climate change is far from settled. If climate change is happening at all, its effects are overstated and beyond human control.

Fossil fuel and high-polluting industries provide significant employment which would be jeopardized, many of which form the primary economic basis for working class and rural areas.

Prevention is impossible. We should redirect our efforts towards adapting our cities and regions to the new environmental circumstances brought on by climate change.

Without corresponding action from other governments, this would just put Australia at an economic disadvantage for little to no ecological benefit.

Caged Egg Prohibition Bill

2017 Brief

The Australian caged egg industry is responsible for the incarceration of over 12 million chickens, in cages no larger than 76 square inches. A standard A4 sheet of paper measures 94 square inches. Those who live within the confines of these cages are destined to a life of pain and suffering. They will be forced to endure untreated broken bones, mutilated beaks and the sharing of cages with their diseased counterparts. They will live this nightmare for their entire existence, a mere 18 months, at which point, they are deemed useless and without ever experiencing sunshine, are carted off to slaughter.

In an effort to save millions of chickens from a life of misery and torture, this Bill endeavours to phase out the production and sale of caged eggs within South Australia. A commissioner for the prohibition of caged eggs, appointed by the Minister for Agriculture, will work towards the cessation of the production and sale of caged eggs by 2020.

Legalisation of Cannabis Bill 2017

Brief

In accordance to state law, the production, distribution and consumption of cannabis is currently illegal and punishable by considerable fines and/or a jail sentence[1]. This Bill will reverse these state laws to legalise production, distribution and consumption of cannabis as well as the distribution and use of related paraphernalia.

The issue of the legalisation of cannabis is relevant in the state of South Australia due to the fact that 10% of all Australians have reported regular use of cannabis.[2] A current lack of maintenance and regulation regarding this matter by government has resulted in a large cannabis black market, sale of unregulated cannabis products and misdirection of law enforcement efforts away from major crimes to petty cannabis-related crimes. Cannabis consumption, production and distribution is legal in numerous countries including various states in the USA, the Netherlands, Cambodia and Czech Republic. The laws of different countries have been used as a basis in the development of this Bill to propose state laws for the legalisation of use, sale and production of cannabis and relevant paraphernalia.

In the logistics of this bill, the terms of use, growth and distribution are discussed as well as new laws which ensure safety of citizens and raise revenue for the South Australian Government. In addition, there are sections detailing the appropriate repercussions for transgression and misuse.

Senior Drivers Bill 2017

Brief

Many seniors are well experienced drivers who are capable of driving safely on our roads. However, aging can significantly impact senior drivers, physically and psychologically. These include "slower reaction times, loss of clarity in vision and hearing, loss of muscle strength and flexibility"[1], drowsiness due to intake of prescribed medication, and poor judgment of speed and distances.

Although senior drivers are involved in smaller number of crashes, research has shown that these crashes are more likely to be fatal or result in severe injury, "due to the frailty of these older users" [1] This can endanger the lives of many South Australians, especially older drivers themselves as research has shown that older drivers are more likely to be involved in fatal and serious injury crashes than other drivers, "probably because of the frailty of these older users".

The purpose of this Bill is to improve the safety of senior drivers and other South Australian road users on our roads by introducing new drivers' licences for South Australians above the age of 75. "As a driver ages they are more likely to be responsible for the crash they are involved in,"[2] and therefore obtaining these new licences requires them to undertake a number of assessments in order to ensure that they are up to date with current road rules, and are physically and mentally fit to drive. This Bill also aims to introduce "S-plates" for senior drivers to improve awareness of other road users and encourage them to be more understanding and patient towards these drivers.

Cessation of Non-Biodegradable Packaging Bill 2017

Brief

Non-biodegradable food packaging, synthetic packaging that the water, air, soil, and light cannot break down, have long-lasting negative effects on the environment. Long-term exposure to air and water can cause synthetic materials like plastic to emit toxic pollutants. A 2007 study released by the Environmental Working Group showed that low doses of Bisphenol A, a chemical used in water bottles, food containers and hard plastics, leach into foods and water over time and are carcinogenic, cause insulin resistance and interfere with conception[1]. Non-biodegradable packaging in oceans can harm fish, birds and other marine life; animals that ingest the materials can be strangled or experience digestion problems.

In an effort to save the environment and prevent further pollution, this Bill aims to phase out the distribution and use of non-biodegradable packaging in fast food establishments within South Australian borders. The Commissioner for Police will assist the Minister for the Environment to make executive decisions to cease the distribution and use of non-biodegradable packaging in fast-food establishments by 2023.

Nuclear Power Development Bill

2017 Brief

This Act aims to establish a nuclear power plant as a sustainable power source made from nuclear materials in South Australia. Currently, South Australia's main source of energy is wind and solar resources[1], and energy from Victoria via the Heywood Interconnector (predominantly generated from brown coal[2]). Dependence on other states can disadvantage South Australia during times of high energy demand.

South Australia needs to have its own power plant to supply reliable base power to be used in conjunction with other renewable energy systems, such as wind and solar power, to allow for the state to have a maintainable power source, and ultimately be a more sustainable and independent state.

By introducing a nuclear power plant, South Australia will benefit in many ways. For one, nuclear power plants have no carbon emissions, instead they emit steam through heating water to spin large turbines. Thus, South Australia will be reducing its carbon footprint, bringing the nation closer to achieving Australia's 2013 Climate Change Target[3] and South Australia's 2050 Target Zero[4].

The production of nuclear power produces waste will require storage. Hence, a Nuclear Waste Management Facility will be constructed. Additionally, the production of energy in a nuclear power plant requires fresh water. To supply this fresh water, a desalination plant will be constructed to prevent regional water stress. These supporting facilities will provide employment opportunities for citizens in South Australia, boosting the economy.

To prevent thermal pollution and local increased salinity within the marine environment, facilities will be situated in the western region of the Eyre Peninsula. Here, the by-products of the Nuclear Power Plant and Desalination Plant can be safely released into the open ocean. Thus, local aquaculture and marine tourism will be unaffected.

Self-Development Bill 2017

Brief

A 2017 joint report from Mission Australia and the Black Dog Institute found that nearly one in four Australian teenagers meet the criteria for a probable serious mental illness[1]. Mental illness in adolescents has long-lasting implications, with mental and substance use disorders being the third most prevalent burden of disease in Australia[2]. These alarming numbers present an urgent need to change the way in which mental health services are delivered to young people.

Currently in South Australia, school-based counsellors are teachers with "additional skills"[3]. However, this presents a conflict of interest; unless a school employs an independent counsellor, the only in-school counselling services are directly related to students' education. In addition to this, a 2015 survey conducted by the Australian Government reported that only 11.5% of young people accessed school services for emotional and behavioral problems in the twelve months prior, despite the high prevalence of stress and mental health issues amongst young people[4].

The intention of this Act is to introduce compulsory counselling – referred to as self-development sessions – for students in grades 7-10. Students will be required to, at a minimum, meet with a qualified school counsellor once a term in a private, one-on-one setting. The powers of this Act will be afforded to the Minister for Youth who will appoint a State Director of Self-Development.

Correctional Services Custodial Operations Bill

2017 Brief

During the developmental stage of childhood, from birth to age five, it is important that children are given every opportunity to receive the nourishment, knowledge and love that only a parent can give. Currently, the children of parents who are imprisoned are deprived of these essential things as they are placed into foster care or end up under the care of Families SA. These children face unstable care arrangements, an increased likelihood of contact with the justice system, and adverse outcomes for their physical and emotional development[1]. The separation of parents from their children also increases the likelihood of the parent reoffending upon their release. It must be noted that Article 9(1) of the United Nation Convention on the Rights of the Child states that all children have a right not to be separated from their parents except where it has been determined that such separation would be necessary for the best interests of that child[2]. If a custodial parent has been incarcerated for a minor offence, it is not necessary for their children to be removed from the parents care and placed into foster care or the state system where their development and future life chances are jeopardised. Furthermore, given the importance of protecting the rights of the child, currently a parent may be let off with a suspended or reduced sentence as imprisoning the parent would negatively impact on the child. Implementing this policy would also enable the judicial system to appropriately sentence those who break the law.

This Bill aims to address this issue through providing residential facilities within the correctional institutions located at the Northfield Prison Complex so as to enable custodial opportunities for parents imprisoned on minor offences with children up to five years of age upon approval by the Chief Officer of the Department of Correctional Services. The prisoner will be responsible for the care of their child with the oversight of the Department of Correctional Services and parental education will be provided to prisoners. At all times, the safety and wellbeing of the child will be the utmost priority.

Criminal Law Consolidation (Provocation) Amendment Bill 2017

Brief

The Criminal Consolidation Act Amendment Bill 2017 proposes a statutory provision that prevents conduct of a sexual nature by a person towards another constituting provocation merely because the two people involved were of differing sexual orientations. In effect, the amendment proposed by this Bill will abolish the 'gay panic' or 'homosexual advance' defence, while simultaneously upholding the basis of provocation defence for use by victims of domestic, and family violence.

Provocation stems from the proposition that someone who kills in response to provocative conduct by the victim is less culpable than someone who kills deliberately in cold blood, but still deserves to face serious stigma and penalty. Whilst an amicable part of Australian common law, provocation defence has been distorted in the form of 'gay panic' defence - stemming from a misinterpretation of the precedent outlined by Green v R (1997) 191 CLR 334 that has pervaded the Australian court system over the past 20 years. In response, the 'gay panic' defence has been effectively abolished in all states with the exception of South Australia.

This Bill would address the issue of 'gay' or 'homosexual' provocation by making an amendment to Part 3; Division 1 of the Criminal Consolidation Act 1935. Under this Section, noted as Offences against the person in relation to Homicide, a clause would be added to clarify what a provocation defence cannot be used for. This clause will clearly state that a provocation defence is unwarranted purely on the basis that the victim is of differing sexual orientation to the defendant.

Cyclists Bill 2017

Brief

This act seeks to regulate and facilitate the actions of all types of cyclists on the road. Cyclists currently have no means of being held accountable for their actions on the road, which this Bill seeks to correct. Penalties will apply if any of the standards of road use for cyclists, as outlined in this Bill, are broken. This Bill seeks to introduce a fairer standard of accountability for all users, reduce road accidents and casualties as a result of negligence and introduce a means of regulation for law enforcement to utilise and ensure reckless cyclists are kept off the roads. Adherence to this Bill will reduce unnecessary casualties and injuries, ensure all users of the roads are aware of the rules and make South Australia's roads safer. Antidepressant Regulations Bill 2017

Brief

Each year, approximately one in five Australians will experience a mental illness, including depression. Mental illnesses are the third leading cause of disability burden in Australia, with many Australians not seeking appropriate help[1]. The most recent national mental health and wellbeing survey, conducted in 2007, demonstrates only 35% have used a health service, and 29% of people consulted a general practitioner within 12 months before the survey; many of which wish to begin antidepressants[2]. Antidepressants are used for severe depression, and have been demonstrated to affect the brain's chemical transmitters, which relay messages between brain cells, and can lead to dependence[3].

In an effort to prevent individuals with mild and moderate depression from relying solely upon prescription medication when seeking depression relief, this Bill aims to restrict the use of antidepressant medication and encourage psychological treatment at the first stage.

Reversal of Firearms Restrictions Bill

2017 Brief

The link between weapons and murders has been explored very heavily for a number of years. Mass murders throughout the world have brought the role that weapons play in the lives of private citizens into question – events like the Columbine High School Massacre, the Sandy Hook Massacre and the Pulse Nightclub Shootings all bring gruesome, vile pictures to mind which, many argue, would never have come to pass were it not for the availability of weaponry to the public.

The argument that weapons should be more heavily restricted and "who on earth needs a [high powered] rifle for any other reason than murdering other human beings?" have all been explored time and time again by commissions from several governments. The correlation between weapons availability and shootings has been especially pertinent to the United States, where a person is injured or killed almost hourly by weapons which are accidentally found or improperly stored by children.

However, the reality is that weapons are not responsible for murder; people are. The vast majority treat their weapons with the appropriate amount of respect and responsibility and would never think to use it outside the realms of the law. In South Australia, there is no evidence to believe that current restrictions do anything to prevent violent deaths in the state (most reports find connections to drugs and mental illness moreso than the actual weapons with which such murders are committed, the majority of which are household items like knives, etc).

It is time that the South Australian Government entrusted arms to its citizens; it is time that these unjust and meddlesome restrictions be removed to allow the public to access these pieces of equipment as the tools for progress that they are.

Firearms can contribute to the security of individuals who would otherwise be left at potential risk, especially in country areas where police presence is minimal. Firearms are already part of many lifestyles in rural South Australia, and those under this demographic suffer because of the stringent and over-complicated regulations that were mostly placed in response to incidents that happened in excess of a decade ago; the principles of safety are similarly relevant to people living in metropolitan areas. Weapons are not the vile grim reapers South Australians have been misled to believe.
